

Improving Management Productivity ... through video

Always room for improvement

Advanced Logistics, a resource for retail displays for highly competitive retail markets, is constantly looking for ways to improve their levels of customer satisfaction through on-time delivery and superior quality.

Kenton Brothers supplies the solution

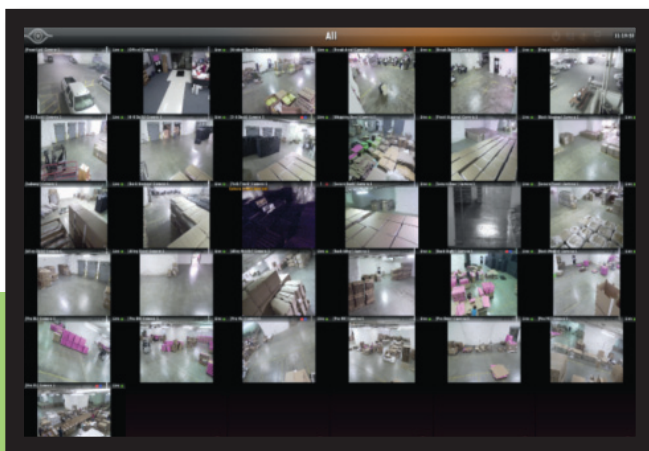

One of the solutions that Kenton Brothers implemented was a video system—but not for the purposes of security. This system was designed for management to view their critical assembly processes. In addition to collecting information to protect employees from false claims, the system allows the management team to perform random productivity audits that are more accurate and efficient than having a manager standing next to them with a stopwatch. This allows the management team to gather information that helps identify and respond to bottlenecks and other issues that could potentially delay a customer's order. The system's online console allows for real-time access to video both in the office or on a mobile device out in the production areas which means that the management can respond to questions or issues much more quickly and efficiently.

"The system has really helped me respond more quickly to questions on the production floor as well as improved my productivity by allowing multi-tasking."

Eddie Hornback, General Manager

"We have a great team, however our managers and supervisors spent a lot of time walking around the facility to observe the operation. With this video management system we have improved their effectiveness and have improved upon some best practices for our operation."

Karen Mathes, President

Left, high-megapixel cameras with adjustable field of view, like the one pictured above, monitor the entire assembly process and display the results on a 55" flatscreen system console to give the management team a complete operations overview on a single screen.
